

Abstract

Integration of a system-level simulation with one or more hardware device simulations is accomplished using a mapping layer, which allows the system-level simulation to interact with the hardware device simulation at a pin level, an object level, and an abstract level. The overall simulation may operate with respect to a clock or timing device or it may operate with respect to transactions.